

Many people say they love to travel, but unfortunately, not everyone understands the difference between traveling and tourism. Let's understand these definitions.

To begin with, travelers and tourists have different goals. Usually, people travel to learn a new language, become more independent, and experience different cultures. Another more important reason is travel on business to earn money. The reason is important, since a person's financial situation depends on a business trip. Tourists, on the other hand, go on various tours and cruises in order to relax. In addition, travellers tend to avoid tourist traps and like to go off the beaten track to discover new places. Another difference is pastime. Travellers journeys are usually much longer.

Traveling to other countries is a real challenge. I have prepared some tips for you if you are planning to come to Mother Russia. Firstly, you need to read about local laws and customs. Secondly, if you are going to Siberia, you should obtain comprehensive travel insurance. Thirdly, you cannot carry packages through the customs for others. Most importantly, if you travel by train, you will have to keep track of your luggage.

We have identified how the traveller differs from the tourist, now let's find out how he differs from the explorer. When explorers set out on a journey, they go for the experience. Additionally, explorers discover new places and keep a diary in which they describe their journey, in order to introduce the general public with their discoveries.

One of the most famous explorers was Jacques Cousteau. He was a French undersea explorer, environmentalist and inventor. Jacques Cousteau is known for inventing scuba gear and creating a society that protects ocean life. For the creation of the Society of Cousteau, he received a great award: he was made a member of the French Academy.

Becoming a "armchair traveller" is easy nowadays.. Using apps, people can explore the world from home. TV, internet shrink the world; some argue travel isn't needed. Virtual travel's popularity grows, offering benefits without hassle.

In conclusion, although travel, tourism and exploration are different activities, they all involve discovering new and exciting things, making them attractive to those who crave adventure and personal growth.
