

Total – 958

Lexical units – 26

Grammar constructions – 4

Linkers – 14

Work

Why is it so important to find a work that will bring you joy? People usually grow up, finish school and then go to the university to study their future profession. Steve Jobs once said that if "Your work is going to fill a large part of your life, and the only way to be truly satisfied is to do what you believe is great work. And the only way to do great work is to love what you do. If you haven't found it yet, keep looking. Don't settle. As with all matters of the heart, you'll know when you find it." So, Jobs can be different. And as a result, everyone will find something that he will enjoy.

In case you ask me, what kind of jobs I would like to do, then you will hear that I prefer jobs, where self-improvement is a necessity. For example, being a coder - is something that requiring a lot of knowledge by itself and with our developing world, where every day new malwares are created, new technologies are integrated and so on and so forth. A coder should adapt to new conditions, so he will be competitive on the job market. Some people may say that this is way harder than doing some monotonous work next to conveyor, but it worth it not only because companies offer you a competitive salary, annual bonuses, but also because your mind won't stagnate. Although when you are in touch of new techs you have more chances to get a job with much better prospects for rapid career progress. Additionally, I can choose the job, by comparing not what I like, but what I genuinely dislike. For instance, I remove from the list all the jobs which require doing a lot of paperwork, monotonous repeated stuff, something which is so strict, that there is no room for creativity.

Furthermore, I think that more important aspects for me in my future job are dealing with people face to face, good opportunities for promotion, the fact that I can work for a big prestigious international firm, so I'll have an opportunity to spend time at overseas branches, and last thing but not least - the fact that I can have a part time or a full-time job.

Nowadays working from home is becoming habitual fact. During the 2020-2021 we all should've been careful because of the coronavirus and stay at home. On the one hand homeworking has a lot of benefit but on the other hand it also has some disadvantages. One of the strong reasons for working from home - you are working on a foreign company or they so far away from you that if you will commute daily to work, it'll take a lot of time, though the great solution of this problem is Homeworking. But if you ask an accountant of the company about advantages of homeworking, they will mention a lot of stuff that could bring benefits mostly to employers. To begin with, if the half of your company are working from home, it means that we can lower the costs for a company by moving the main office to a smaller site, by reducing the number of workstations, at least some workers that cannot work with new techs will be fired, additionally since workers are always at their workspace (home) employers could charge them to burn the candle at both ends and take fewer sick days. The main disadvantages are the fact that this is hard to pull off and it's mostly ruin employee's daily routine.

Personally, I hate working from home. I can forgive only one case when it is preferable - when you make a living by selling your artworks or you are working on yourself in general. But otherwise, when you work from home, you mix up your work and home routine, because you need to plan a work schedule and adjust it to the needs of your employers which may result in procrastination, because you always have ability to easily swap your work to entertainment by two clicks. Nevertheless, working not at home allow you to have better work-life balance and to keep good relationships with your family. And for me,

It think, I just need more room for workspace, but with my big family there is no opportunities even to get space for seclusion.

In case someone will ask you, internships are learning opportunities while you study, and Jobs are something you get after you graduate. People often don't know which is better: to complete a work placement or an internship? While internships may exploit young people by the fact that they are rarely paid but usually unpaid, they are aimed at recent graduates which are looking to get experience and to get enough training in a particular field. Whereas work placements are taken as part of a degree. Students on a placement year are completing a module and receive not only academic credit for the year, but also an opportunity to have a job offer or to take on a responsible role.

Young people during the internships can find new friends, get enough training and get into a work sector.

To sum up, choosing a job nowadays is a big problem for young generation. In the big world where you can try other professions, rather than your parent's, where nobody wants to work for peanuts, thus you should be competitive on the job marked not only for a year, but throughout all your career, it is hard to pick up the one which will correlate with all the factors above and your personal preferences. So, for now, we have no choice but to adapt to modern technologies, so computers couldn't replace us.